Banks by Payscale

Bulge brackets and boutiques, bucketed by prestige and pay. Figures are approximate first-year analyst all-in compensation (base plus bonus) in New York. Base is largely standardized across the top tiers, so most of the spread is bonus and bucket, plus how far pay separates at the associate level and beyond.

S Tier · Elite Boutiques — $185k – $210k

Evercore · Lazard · Moelis & Company · Greenhill

A Tier · Top Bulge & Elite Boutiques — $180k – $205k

Goldman Sachs · Morgan Stanley · PJT Partners · Centerview Partners · Perella Weinberg Partners · Houlihan Lokey · Jefferies

B Tier · Bulge Bracket — $170k – $195k

JPMorgan Chase & Co. · Citi · Barclays · BNP Paribas · UBS · RBC · TD · Bank of America · Wells Fargo

C Tier · Lower Bulge & International — $155k – $185k

HSBC · Deutsche Bank · Nomura · Mizuho · SMBC · Rothschild & Co · Crédit Agricole · Natixis

D Tier · Middle Market & Regional — $130k – $170k

Raymond James · Stifel · William Blair · Haitong · BMO · Canaccord Genuity · SEB · Oppenheimer

READING THE TIERS

At the analyst level, base pay is roughly $110k to $120k almost everywhere, so first-year all-in clusters tightly across the top tiers. The separation these numbers do not show is where it matters most: pay diverges sharply at the associate level, where elite boutiques pull well ahead and pay in cash rather than deferred stock, and exit opportunities into private equity and hedge funds track the tier far more closely than analyst pay does.

Know your tier. Run the play. Land the seat.

Take the 60-second quiz and see which desks are realistic for your profile.

TAKE THE QUIZ → wallstalpha.com/apply

Approximate first-year analyst all-in (base plus bonus), New York, pre-tax. Based on 2025 to 2026 public compensation reports; individual outcomes vary by group, bucket, and year. Educational only; not affiliated with or endorsed by any firm named.